

AMY S. PEELE

Amy S. Peele, RN enjoyed a fascinating 35-year career in transplantation in the most cutting edge and well-respected programs in the U.S. Her career spanned from the time when transplants were rare and novel events to a time when these lifesaving procedures became a viable option for patients. As Director of Clinical Operations at UCSF, she oversaw a team that successfully completed over 600 transplants annually.

Now Peele brings her real-life experience and medical knowledge to her fast-paced, suspenseful fiction set against the backdrop of the riveting world of organ transplantation. Though the characters and events in her mysteries are fictional, the dilemmas which patients, caregivers, and medical professionals endure are plucked from real life.

A sequel to her award-winning debut mystery, Cut, Match is a page-turning thriller that takes the reader into the vivid and dramatic world of kidney transplantation. Peele expertly weaves politics, living donor kidney transplants & the opioid crisis into a fast-paced, nonstop adventure wrapped into a fun romp of a buddy-story that promises to keep readers turning pages after their bedtime.

As a lighthearted break from the drama of the medical world, Peele learned early on that humor was an important survival skill. She studied improv at Second City in Chicago and brings a fresh, knowledgeable, and humorous new voice into the world of mystery novels.
